Boston, MA - September 14, 2011 - The Boston based pop-punk trio known as Super Prime are currently gearing up to self-release their second EP, "Sun's Out, Gun's Out". The album is due out October 8th and the band will be celebrating the CD release in style at The Middle East, Boston's premiere rock 'n' roll joint. Lineup also includes: The American Spirit, A Guy Named Guy, and Me Vs. Gravity. For more information, please visit Super Prime official facebook page.

Formed at the musical haven of Berklee College of Music, Super Prime consists of Austin Bond (vocals, bass), Adam Newall (vocals, guitar), and Marcus James (drums). The band fiercely stepped out into the Boston rock scene in the spring of 2011, mere moments after their inception. In under a year they recorded and released their first EP, "Super Prime", opened for L.A. bubblegum punk darlings The Dollyrots, recorded and produced their second EP, "Sun's Out, Gun's Out", and began working on tracks for their first full length with renowned Boston producer- Brian Charles (Bright Eyes, The Faint) in September 2011.

Borrowing from the very best elements of early pop punk and nineties angsty emo rock, Super Prime illustrates the epitome of this generations pop-punk genre. Quick and catchy guitar riffs woven between hard-driving drums lay the perfect foundation for the Billie Joe Armstrong-eque singing and the gang-vocal inducing lyrics. Their live show explodes out of the basement and onto the pavement, drenched in beer and humming with a sweaty intensity that leaves fans spinning yet smiling.

Super Prime's sophomore EP "Sun's Out, Gun's Out" is due out October 8th. The band will be extensively touring the US and the UK over the next few months as they are signed with Supreme Artist Booking (Hawthorne Heights, Lit, Filter, The Click 5, Sugarcult) in support of the new album. Having accomplished so much in their young careers already, it's clear Super Prime is merely at the cusp of their success.
